The police of the Longueuil agglomeration will modernize its three interrogation rooms with MaestroVision's technology.

In a constant effort to improve its productivity, the police department of the Longueuil agglomeration has just renewed its three interrogation rooms with the most sophisticated technology available.

Concerned about the reduction of crime in its territory by increasing the efficiency of its investigators motivated the city of Longueuil. The investment in this new 100% Quebec technology will enable it to achieve its objective of offering its population a better sense of security.

This system acquired by the police department, designed by the manufacturer MaestroVision, offers the possibility of indexing all the notes with interrogations. This principle makes it possible to quickly find and recross a specific moment in an interrogation, saving valuable time to the investigators. Moreover, this system is of a disconcerting simplicity. It is no longer necessary for an investigator to employ the services of a specialized technician to use the system.

This is a perfect example of the best practices used through new technologies for law enforcement.
